The reason for this is because Photoshop will have very few options to work with images. Most of the features you will use are available from within the image itself and this means that you will have to understand what the image is actually telling you. For example, when you crop an image, you are selecting certain pixels from one part of the image and leaving the rest. What this means is that the rest of the image and its settings are intact. In Photoshop, there is no option to change the settings of the whole image in one go. Metrolight (travelling exhibition) Metrolight was a travelling exhibition and series of events curated by the Museum of Liverpool. It toured England and Ireland from 2005 to 2007 in what was described as a "cultural journey". The exhibition brought together materials from the collections of the museum relating to Liverpool's relationship with rail and the railways, and explored Liverpool's suburban and regional railways. Metrolight was the first exhibition of its kind in the UK, and the first to travel exclusively on public transport. The museum commissioned artists to paint illustrations for each of the 60 stations visited by Metrolight. The illustrations, which were designed and painted by new and emerging artists, were produced in response to themes chosen by local residents and visitors to Liverpool's Paddington and Lime Street stations. They were funded by a £1.5m grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund. The exhibition coincided with the launch of the museum's new online visitors' guide, which was the first time the railway had featured in a national visitors' guide. The guide was produced in association with the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) and the Railway Heritage Society.
