Read MoreI have been a cigar smoker for a while, about 6 years, when I started it was only to relax, but once I starting liking it I couldn't stop. I would go to a cigar lounge, or go to the beach and smoke, and it was amazing. Then I started enjoying smoking cigars every day, specially in the days I worked. It helped me to unwind. The first time I smoked a cigar I can't even remember the brand, it just arrived at my house and I don't remember how I got it, probably from a friend of mine. I started smoking a lot of cigars and then when I started to smoke my last cigar, it was the day I started to work. Now I smoke only four or five times a month, but I enjoy it just like I enjoyed it before. When I was in my mid-20s, I had been smoking a lot of cigars, mostly two a day. I also liked to "treat" myself with expensive wines or fine foods. I remember I felt guilty and would resolve to cut back. In

Disclaimer: All trademarks are the property of their respective owners.As we all know, the practice of tracking a person or an object over a long distance using several cameras placed at certain locations relative to each other is referred to as a pan/tilt/zoom (PTZ) camera system. A PTZ camera system is comprised of multiple cameras that are controlled by a computer. Typically, a PTZ camera system has three primary components: the computer, the camera, and the pan/tilt unit that moves the camera to the desired location, e.g., above or beside a wall. A typical PTZ camera system usually requires one or more incremental steps to control the movement of the camera. For example, in a PTZ camera system the computer controls the movement of the camera to a selected location using coordinates of the desired location. Further, the pan/tilt unit is controlled to move the camera to the desired location in a predefined period of time. There are many problems with current PTZ cameras. One such problem is the ambiguity of the current location of the cameras when the camera is moved. This problem arises because the pan/tilt/zoom camera system uses coordinates as the reference for movement of the camera. For example, assuming that in a PTZ camera system the computer is used to control the movement of the camera to a position of a wall. The computer receives as inputs the x and y coordinates of the position of the wall. Further, assuming that the coordinates of the position of the wall are 50 inches (127 mm) from the left edge of the wall and 50 inches (127 mm) from the top edge of the wall. Further, the Z coordinate of the point on the wall is also known. Also, assume that the reference point of the camera system is the middle of the wall. Therefore, the coordinates of the camera position are 50 inches (127 mm) from the left edge of the wall and 50 inches (127 mm) from the top edge of the wall, but the camera system can be anywhere on the wall. A more detailed description of the above example of the prior art PTZ camera system is set forth below. The x coordinate is 50 inches (127 mm) from the left edge of the wall and the y coordinate is 50 inches (127 mm) from the top edge of the wall. Further, the z coordinate is also known to be 100 inches (254 mm) from the top edge of the wall. This means that the camera can

Enjoy!Diabetes mellitus is a metabolic disease characterized by high blood glucose levels due to the reduced ability of the insulin-producing pancreas (islets of Langerhans) and the insulin resistance of the tissues to the action of the insulin. Insulin is an anabolic hormone which acts on different tissues of the body to lower the blood sugar. Insulin resistance occurs with the aging process and is the cause for an increasing number of people who have diabetes. The insulin resistance is further aggravated by a poor diet. About 5% of the population suffers from diabetes and this number is increasing and is expected to increase to 7.5% in the year 2000. Among the different types of diabetes, the most prevalent one is Type II diabetes, also called Non-Insulin Dependent Diabetes Mellitus (NIDDM). Type II diabetes is characterized by a reduced ability of the pancreas to produce insulin in response to the increased need for this hormone. Consequently, higher than normal concentrations of glucose are present in the bloodstream. Since the insulin molecules circulating in the blood cannot penetrate the cell wall and the receptors on the cell surface, the glucose concentration inside the cell increases. In the cell, glucose is taken up by specific carriers that fuse with the plasma membrane, followed by the hydrolysis of the glucose to glucose 6-phosphate. Glucose 6-phosphate is converted to glucose by glucokinase. The large excess of glucose relative to that required by metabolism and the storage in the form of glycogen is metabolized via glycolysis, the hexose monophosphate shunt, and the pentose phosphate pathway to pyruvate. The pyruvate is reduced to lactate, which is secreted. The other end-products are reduced to alcohol
